Imagine not being able to hear since birth. Imagine the solitude of a recovering stroke victim whose thoughts cannot find form, whose lips need guidance to mold words. Then imagine a young girl with a cochlear implant, a device that allows her to hear sounds and transmit them to the inner ear, practice sounds that match those of her speech therapist. The stroke patient also forms words anew, guided patiently by a speech pathologist.

On any given day at Marymount Manhattan College, you will find patients working with student therapists who help them regain control of their speech and language in the facility known as the Ruth Smadbeck Communication and Learning Center. The Center, as part of the Department of Communication Sciences and Disorders (CSD), is a training site for undergraduate speech pathology and audiology students enrolled as majors in CSD. Oversight for the Center rests with Dr. Ann Jablon, Chair of the Division of Sciences, who is also an associate professor of Speech-Language Pathology and Audiology, licensed in New York and certified...

by the American Speech and Hearing Association (ASHA).

Dr. Linda S. Carozza, who holds a Ph.D. in Speech and Hearing Sciences from the City University of New York, serves as the Center’s Director and oversees student training. While Dr. Jablon’s expertise is in child language disorders, Dr. Carozza’s rests with the neurogenic language disorders of adults. These different but complementary specialties serve the Center supremely well. Dr. Carozza is very pleased to work “in an environment that is highly professional in the superb quality of the staff and students, as well as its approach to the treatment and care of our clients.

She states that the Smadbeck Center “is a state-of-the-art clinic with professional therapy rooms and closed-circuit observation posts, that is also a speech research laboratory.” The lab computers are used for voice analysis, speech spectrograms, and acoustic wave form analysis, which convert speech signals into computer generated signal displays that are used to instruct students in acoustic science.

The entire facility is supervised by licensed staff and faculty and used by MMC students who are majoring in Communication Science and Disorders; by Theatre Department students for voice and diction training; by professionals for speaking enhancement; by members of the MMC community and the general public in need of services. Graduate externs and research volunteers also enrich the Center with their presence and receive needed experience in return. The Center had approximately 20 clients during the Fall 2005 semester, ranging from three to 83 years of age. Referrals to the Smadbeck Center come from MMC faculty, schools, otolaryngologists, and by word of mouth.

Below, Angellica Clayton-Spray (left), a child with a cochlear implant, receives instruction in vibro-tactile feedback from Senior Maureen Jones to improve voice and speech quality.
The CSD major at MMC, which usually includes 40 students per year, offers both a strong liberal arts component and the appropriate courses and training in the field. The study of the anatomy and physiology of the speech mechanism, normal language development, language processes, speech pathology, and audiology are some of the courses that lay the groundwork for eventual diagnosis and treatment of disorders. Students also take courses in linguistics and phonetics. In addition, students learn diagnostic testing and treatment techniques both for children and adults with a variety of speech and hearing disorders. Three full-time professors, Dr. Susan Behrens and Drs. Carozza and Jablon, and two part-time adjunct professors, serve as faculty for the Department and the Center.

As seniors, CSD majors take part in a two-semester capstone course prior to graduation and certification. During this time, they provide speech and language services to clients under the professional supervision of licensed and certified Speech/Language Pathologists and Audiologists in an environment that is comparable to those in a community hospital’s outpatient department and other school clinics. Faculty members monitor, observe and comment on the encounters by using video monitors housed in the observation suite and connected to the treatment rooms. This closed-circuit observation replaces the older model of a two-way mirror, although the Center’s observation rooms still have it available.

Practical application of theoretical instruction and one-on-one directed training benefits MMC students as they prepare for further professional training. Many MMC graduates of the CSD program are current practitioners in private practice, in public schools, medical centers and elsewhere. Others will go on to careers in research and teaching.

A Nod to History
The Smadbeck Center opened in 1974 as the Communication and Learning Center. Drs. Florence D. Wiener and Joan Shapiro founded the Center to provide services to the hearing impaired. In 1988, a grant from the Heckscher Foundation for Children established an endowment for the Center, renamed the Ruth Smadbeck Center in memory of the former president at the Heckscher Foundation, a longtime supporter of the College and the Center.

In October 2003, the College’s Departments of Psychology and Communication Sciences and Disorders and the Center were relocated from the lower level to the seventh floor of the Main Building. The relocation and the upgrading of observational space and equipment, was funded in part by the Heckscher Endowment and the George I. Alden Trust.

A Look to the Future
Built on a solid foundation, holding strong as a productive and active clinical facility, and now poised to enhance student and client experiences, the Center looks to the future. Starting in January 2006 the clinic will embark on year-round programming. Research course offerings, designed as service learning workshops, will be open to interdisciplinary students and more conferences, such as the Conference on Autism held in January, will be planned.

Therapists, parents, clients: they all have a stake in the outcome of successful therapy. Dr. Carozza feels that “there is a sense of uplifting joy and fulfillment that all of us feel when children begin to say their first words; or when adults can finally communicate their needs and wants in their daily life.”

A Year of Change for MMC's Business Division

Alumna Takes on Role as Chair

BY ERIN J. SAUER

Business students may have noticed some changes to the Accounting and Business Management Division this fall semester. Perhaps they noticed the plethora of new information, ranging from the division’s teaching philosophy to New York internships to new business clubs and organizations that are now found on the division’s web pages. Or maybe they have taken note of a number of new faces walking through the halls, with the addition of three new full-time business faculty. Or perhaps they have met personally with the division’s new chair, Dr. Eileen Tynan ’66, an alumna of the College, to discuss their concentration and future goals.

Dr. Tynan, who has taught at MMC since 2001 as an Associate Professor of Business Management, took on the chair role in August 2005. (She replaced former chair, Leslie Levin, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Business Management, who is currently focusing on the marketing concentration of the business management major.) Since that time, she has begun taking steps to grow the division’s two majors, accounting and business management, which already have 155+ students enrolled.

“The Business Division has long been successful in attracting the returning student, and MMC was, in fact, one of the pioneers in seeking out and supporting the ‘adult’ student,” says Dr. Tynan. “We want to continue to make Marymount Manhattan an attractive option for that population, as well as increase the number of incoming ‘traditional freshman’ who enter the program.”

According to Dr. Tynan, some of the qualities that make the two MMC business programs competitive are small classes, a balance of full-time and adjunct faculty, student-centered teaching, unique major concentrations, many internship opportunities, joint B.S./M.S. with other institutions, and technology-enhanced classrooms.

Some of the Business Division’s faculty members in the division office:
"At MMC, our business management and accounting professors are very accessible," says Shelby Williamson ’07, an Accounting major. "I am not just a number—my professors know me. It makes my experience much more worthwhile."

The College, with its strong focus on the liberal arts, also provides its students with the skills other business graduates may lack.

“We want to make sure our students graduate with the fundamental skills we stress in a liberal arts college—writing, presentation, and critical analysis,” says Dr. Tynan. “We want them to study philosophy, history, government, as well as in-depth business and accounting courses. More than ever, success in business today requires an understanding of how the world works.”

According to Assistant Professor of Business Management Vladimir Pashkevich, Ph.D., the goal of the MMC business programs is to “provide students with many opportunities to alternate between theoretical knowledge in the classroom and applying that knowledge in practical ways.”

Another strength of the division may be the diverse backgrounds of its faculty. Dr. Tynan has her Ph.D. in economics; her field of specialty is the economics of healthcare. Her previous work as a health services researcher and policy analyst brings something unique to her economics-focused classes. Richard Garret, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Business Management, is also an economist whose interests are in macro and labor economics. Rosina Wachtel, J.D., L.L.M., C.P.A., Assistant Professor of Accounting and Business Management, is an attorney as well as a C.P.A.

This year the Division added three new faculty members. Matthew Paldy, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of Business Management, is teaching courses in management and the business division’s introductory course, “The Contemporary Workplace,” which is also taken by students in other majors. Corrine Crawford, M.B.A., C.P.A., Assistant Professor of Accounting, brings her experience at KPMG and PriceWaterhouseCoopers to the MMC accounting program. And Dr. Pashkevich, who teaches marketing courses, specializes in consumer and management decision-making. (For more information on the business faculty, visit www.mmm.edu/study/programs/dabm.html.)

In addition to the two majors, the division also offers a business management minor, which is very popular at the College. According to Dr. Tynan, it’s “important for students in other majors to take business courses to better understand the world and how businesses operate in the world.”

“Today’s young people like to have minors and they like the business management minor as an extra credential,” says Dr. Tynan. “Dance majors who have plans to open studios or work for a dance company on the business side find it very useful. As well, English majors who have an interest in advertising or marketing are drawn to take these extra classes.”

Through the MMC Office of Career Development and Internships, qualified business students can apply for for-credit internships at some of the most desirable companies in New York City. Some of these include but are not limited to: Bloomberg Business News, CBS, Dolce & Gabanna, DreamWorks, Ernst & Young, Estee Lauder, Jim Henson Productions, Ogilvy & Mather, Simon & Schuster, Smith Barney, and Time Warner.

“We consider internships an essential part of the undergraduate experience,” says Dr. Tynan. “When a company looks to hire a college graduate more and more they look to see if they have internship experience. We also find that our students are very excited by the business opportunities available to them before they even graduate.”

The two majors carry a tough set of requirements (60 credits for accounting majors and 59 credits for business management majors), so the high numbers of students who opt for minors and internship experiences is impressive. Additionally, accounting majors can apply for an M.S. program in accounting available through agreements with both Pace and St. John’s Universities. In five years, students who pursue that option will have both a B.S. and an M.S. in accounting and enough credits to sit for the C.P.A. exam.

“The business management and accounting curriculums are designed so that students can make a seamless transition to graduate programs whether immediately or after a few years of employment,” says Dr. Richard Garret. “Many of our students, more so than in the past, plan to pursue a master’s degree or an M.B.A.”

The Business Division is always interested in what its alumni are doing. Please email Dr. Tynan updates: etynan@mmm.edu

Marymount Manhattan Receives $5 Million from Trustee Judith M. Carson ’03

Gift Marks Largest Donation Ever Received by the College

The Carson Family Charitable Trust, on the initiative of alumna and trustee Judith M. Carson ’03, has committed a $5 million unrestricted gift to the College. This gift, the largest ever received by the College, will be used to enhance resources and opportunities for faculty and students at MMC. Additionally, the Carsons have recently donated an additional $50,000 toward the College’s priority needs.

Judy Carson earned a bachelor’s degree in art history from Marymount Manhattan in 2003. She now holds a leadership position as a member of the Board of Trustees of the College, and was honored earlier this year with MMC’s highest honor, the President’s Medal, for her commitment to enhancing educational opportunities throughout the city. She founded Learning to Look, a monthly arts appreciation program serving 850 students in inner city Catholic schools, and serves on the boards of the Inner-City Scholarship Fund, the Central Park Conservancy, the Metropolitan Opera and the Education Committee of the Metropolitan Museum of Art. She is also a former board member at Kenyon College in Ohio.

“Over the past few years I have had the opportunity to see Marymount Manhattan from the perspective of a student, an alumna and now a trustee,” said Judy Carson. “This well-rounded perspective has shown me what a unique and special place MMC is, and I am proud to have the opportunity to give back to my alma mater in this way. With this contribution my family and I offer our support for the direction in which the College is headed and the strategic vision of the leadership at MMC.”

The Carson Family Charitable Trust was established in New York in 1990, and provides funding primarily for poverty relief and community development in New York City. Judy and Russell Carson, along with their children, Cecily and Edward, and the U.S. Trust Co., serve as trustees.

“This tremendous gift marks an exceptional and historic moment for Marymount Manhattan,” said MMC president Judson R. Shaver, Ph.D. “Judy and her family have demonstrated their clear commitment to the mission and future of the College.”

Leaders in Washington Secure Funding for Marymount Manhattan College’s Bedford Hills College Program

Education Program for Women Inmates Supported by Senator Clinton and Congresswoman Maloney

Funding in the amount of $250,000 has been secured for MMC’s Bedford Hills College Program through the passing of the FY06 federal appropriations bill for science, justice and commerce. The BHCP funding was included in the bill due to the supportive efforts of Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton (D-NY) (above, at Commencement 2005) and Congresswoman Carolyn Maloney (D-NY).

Through the Bedford Hills College Program, MMC offers college and college-preparatory coursework to inmates at Bedford Hills Correctional Facility, a New York State maximum-security prison for women.

Leadership at Marymount Manhattan reached out to representatives in Washington earlier this year to educate them about the BHCP and request much-needed financial support. The federal funding will help to upgrade facilities and improve the technological resources available to students participating in the program.

Congresswoman Maloney (right) said, “I am proud to have worked with Marymount Manhattan College to secure federal funding for their Bedford Hills College Program. With this new funding, they will be able to better provide college and college-preparatory coursework to inmates at Bedford Hills Correctional Facility so that these women can leave prison with more of the skill sets and education they need to be productive members of society.”

Other recent major gifts to the BHCP include:

An anonymous friend of the College donated $125,000 to the Bedford Hills College Program.

The Rowe Family Foundation donated $50,000 to support faculty stipends, technology equipment and technology training for the Bedford Hills College Program.

Sheila Wishek donated $10,000 in support of the Bedford Hills College Program.
In Appreciation of Our Major Donors...

On Tues., Dec. 6, 2005 Marymount Manhattan’s most generous donors came together with President Judson R. Shaver, students and faculty at the Mark Hotel for cocktails and dinner. The 74 guests in attendance enjoyed a performance by MMC students Kathleen Donohue ’06, Corey Jenkins ’06 and Joshua Bednarsky ’07. Laura Baum ’09, a scholarship student, talked about her experiences at Marymount Manhattan and thanked the donors for their generosity.

President Judson R. Shaver, Trustee Judy Carson ’03 and Board Chair Anna Hayes Levin.

Trustee Emeritus Bill Murray and Helen Flynn.

Seth and Sarah Glickenhaus.

Author Nicholas Sparks Offers Writing Advice to Class on Gender Issues

On Tues., Oct. 25, 2005, best-selling author Nicholas Sparks was a guest speaker for the class “Gender Issues.” The class, taught by Lewis Burke Frumkes, Director of the MMC Writing Center, included an interview with Sparks by Frumkes for his radio show, The Lewis Burke Frumkes Show, on WPAT-AM in New York, followed by a question and answer session between the students and Sparks.

“Mr. Sparks interacted a lot with us during the class. I found him funny and easy to approach; not at all like someone who makes millions writing books,” says Julianna Lucre ’09. “All of the students found something about him that they could take and use in their own lives.”

Sparks, known for many of his best-selling novels that have been turned into movies, discussed his career, his interest in writing, and his favorite authors. He also spoke on the difficulties of writing and publishing a novel. Sparks has a total of eleven books to his credit, including The Notebook, Message in a Bottle, and A Walk to Remember, and he is the third author ever to have a novel on the Best-Seller’s list for over a year (The Notebook).

Parents Welcome Reception 2005

On Fri., Oct. 28, 2005, Marymount Manhattan College hosted a Parents Welcome Reception, one of many events during Parents Weekend (Oct 28-30, 2005). Over 100 people attended the reception, which was designed to introduce parents to members of the MMC community. A three-piece jazz ensemble entertained those in attendance.

Hewitt Gallery of Art Fall Exhibits

If you have visited the College recently, no doubt you have noticed the artwork hanging on the walls as soon as you walk through the 71st Street entrance. The Hewitt Gallery of Art is located in the Esplanade and adjacent Black and White Galleries of the Main Building. It is a recognized showcase gallery that offers both well-known and emerging artists an opportunity for exposure within the art world and the MMC community. This fall the Gallery held four exhibits, prepared by the Gallery’s Director, Millie Burns, Assistant Professor of Art at the College. Professor Burns works with a panel of art department faculty to select the artists and decide the theme of each exhibit.

The first exhibit, “The Shape of Things to Come,” featured art by Janice Caswell, Keith Gamache and Nancy Kearing, who use shapes in their work. The second exhibit, “By The Numbers,” involved artists who incorporate math symbols into their works of art. The artists featured in this exhibit included Sarah Ferguson, Howardena Pindell and Matthew Deleget.

“O/C (oil on canvas),” the third exhibit, featured artists Robert Cronin and Vincent Ciniglio, who create works of art using oil on canvas. Although both use the same medium, they each produce different results. The final exhibit of the fall semester was “Real and Imagined.” It featured landscapes by Raina Accardi, Theresa Bloise, Kim Keeever and William Knipscher. This exhibit asked viewers to ponder what was real and what the artist had created. For a listing of spring exhibits, turn to page 24 or visit www.mmm.edu/news/index.html and click on “Events.”

Ita Ford ’61 Commemorative Lecture

On Mon., Nov. 14, 2005, MMC held a Commemorative Lecture in memory of Ita Ford ’61, marking the 25th anniversary of her death. Sr. Ita, a Maryknoll Sister, was murdered along with three other churchwomen on Dec. 2, 1980 while doing volunteer work in El Salvador. The lecture was held in the Regina Peruggi Room and was attended by faculty, staff and students, as well as Sr. Ita’s friends and family members.

The guest lecturer was Curt Cadorette, Ph.D., MM, who holds the John Newman Chair of Catholic Studies at the University of Rochester, and knew Sr. Ita personally. Panel respondents included Jeanne Evans, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of Religious Studies at MMC, William Ford, Esq., Sr. Ita’s brother, and David Gandolfo, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of Philosophy at MMC. Dr. Evans recently published a book on Sr. Ita entitled Here I Am Lord: The Letters and Writings of Ita Ford.

Sr. Virginia Dorgan, RSHM, Director of Campus Ministry, read a homily written by Father Oscar Romero and translated by Sr. Ita. Fr. Romero had been murdered in El Salvador shortly before Ita and her three companions. John Costello, M.A., Associate Professor of English at MMC, read a poem, written by Joseph Clancy, Professor Emeritus of English and Theatre at MMC, in response to the news of Ita’s murder.

A reception following the lecture allowed participants and audience members to remember their interaction with Sr. Ita and provided MMC students with a look into the tragic circumstances of her death, which resulted from political turmoil in Central America.
Adjunct Art Professor Karen Adelaar’s work was featured in the September 2005 issue of the Catskill Mountain Region Guide.*

Assistant Biology Professor Ann Aguanno attended the Fifth Annual Career Symposium in the Basic Medical Sciences, held at the New York University School of Medicine Sakler Institute on November 12, 2005. She participated in a panel discussion, “A Day in the Life: Teaching Colleges,” where she spoke on the circumstances that led to her current position and what a typical day in her job is like. She also gave advice to students interested in pursuing careers in the field.

Mike Backus, Adjunct Core Curriculum Instructor and Assistant to the Division of Social Sciences, published the article “Finding a Stronger Ending” in the December 2005 issue of The Writer magazine.

Associate Communication Sciences and Disorders Professor Sue Behrens was appointed this fall to the editorial board of the journal Research and Teaching in Developmental Education. Additionally, she published a review in the Fall 2005 issue of the journal entitled “That’s Not What I Meant: Language, Culture, and Meaning.” (Review of Video by Deborah Tannen) 22:(1), pp. 90-94.

Clinic Director Linda Carozza (Ruth Smadbeck Communication and Learning Center) presented two papers at the 17th Annual Greater New York Conference on Behavioral Research, November 4, 2005, at John Jay College of Criminal Justice of the CUNY system. The papers were “Language Decline in Alzheimer’s Disease,” and “Perceptions of Life Stressors, Communicative Effectiveness and Quality of Life of Stroke Patients with Communicative Impairments and their Caregivers.”

Assistant Philosophy Professor Mark Conard was editor of The Philosophy of Film Noir, published by University Press of Kentucky in 2005. He also wrote the included chapters “Nietzsche and the Meaning and Definition of Noir,” and “Symbolism, Meaning, and Nihilism in Quentin Tarantino’s Pulp Fiction.”

Adjunct Dance Professor Michelle Ferranti had her costume designs mentioned in two September 2005 reviews of Jody Sperling’s Dance of the Elements, which was performed in this year’s Fall for Dance festival. The reviews appeared in the New York Times and the New York Daily News.

Assistant Communication Arts Professor Katie LeBesco was quoted in a feature story in the Arts and Leisure section of the New York Times on December 11, 2005. The article, “What’s So Funny About Disability? Well . . .” quotes Professor LeBesco in reference to her research for an article she published in the Disability Studies Quarterly.

Associate Psychology Professor Cheryl Paradis was interviewed for a piece on how people respond to national tragedy in the September 11, 2005 edition of The Sun Chronicle, a regional newspaper in Massachusetts.*

Assistant Chemistry Professor Biba Sampoli Benitez’s work, “In silico Studies of the African Swine Fever Virus DNA Polymerase X Support an Induced-Fit Mechanism” was chosen to appear on the cover of the Biophysical Journal 90:1, January 2006.

Assistant Digital Media Professor Morgan Schwartz was mentioned in Megan Ogilve’s article “Sending Messages to the Sky,” in the Toronto Star, December 11, 2005. The article discussed Schwartz’s current art project “Whether/Weather.”

On January 4 and 5, 2005, Ghassan Shabaneh, Assistant Professor of International Studies, appeared on WABC Channel 7 Eyewitness News, to discuss the impact of Ariel Sharon’s stroke on Israeli-Palestinian relations.

MMC Theatre Production Workshop’s The Holy Terror: An Adaptation of Shakespeare’s Richard II was written up by Martin Denton on NYTheatre.com on November 17, 2005.*

Laura Tropp, Assistant Professor of Communication Arts, was quoted in an article in the December 2005 issue of Cookie, a new magazine devoted to parenting. The article discussed the phenomenon of celebrity pregnancy.*

Social Sciences Division Chair Kent Worcester was mentioned in a piece on comics in the September 22, 2005 issue of the Toronto weekly newspaper The Eye.*

*Additional information and web links can be found on www.mmm.edu/news/index.html by clicking “MMC in the News.”
The Division of Humanities, Philosophy Department added a new full-time faculty member this fall, Assistant Philosophy Professor David Gandolfo (below). The College currently offers a Philosophy minor to students.

Dr. Gandolfo earned his Ph.D. in philosophy from Loyola University Chicago. His doctoral work included two years of research, writing and teaching at the Universidad Centroamericana in El Salvador and his dissertation was on Latin American liberation philosophy. Currently, he is working on the question, “What does a liberation philosophy developed in the so-called Third World have to say to us living in the center of world power?”

During the fall, Dr. Gandolfo participated in a philosophy forum for students at MMC. Held on Oct. 3, 2005, the forum was called “Terrorism, Hypocrisy and Colonialism: On the Need for a Supra-National Political Regime.”

Marymount Manhattan College’s English Department introduced a new Creative Writing Minor this fall. The program was created to enhance the department’s creative writing offerings, satisfying a recognizable demand for such from current and potential students. Having this option at MMC also allows the College to enroll in the Association of Writers and Writing Programs (AWP).

Jerry Williams, M.F.A., Assistant Professor of English at MMC was hired in the fall of 2004 and then Sejal Shah, M.F.A., Assistant Professor of English, joined the department in the fall of 2005. Both of these new full-time hires made launching this program a reality.

On the importance of this option, Professor Williams says, “A creative writing minor helps students identify what genre they want to write in, gives workshop experience, and helps students create a portfolio.”

The department has hosted a number of creative writing events this fall to promote the new program. Alumni are encouraged to contact Professor Williams if they have published their own creative work and would like to come to the College for readings or other events. He can be reached via email at jwilliams@mmm.edu.
Manhattan Wine Tasting

On Thurs., Oct. 6, 2005, MMC alumni gathered for hors d’oeuvres and a wine tasting at Vintage New York on Broome Street in SoHo. This event has become somewhat of a tradition for alumni, as a similar party was held in Sept. 2004, which drew a nice crowd. This year was no different, as attendees included alumni from the 1960s, 70s, 80s, 90s, and 00s.

“I am enjoying the renewed focus that MMC has placed on providing opportunities for alumni to meet on a regular basis in many different venues,” says Carol Vincie ’67. “I was particularly impressed by the fact that the President attended and took the time to communicate with alumni in a smaller, more intimate setting.”

Cape Cod Luncheon and Estate Planning Seminar

“On a rainy day, it was nice to share a gracious lunch with fellow alumni at the cozy Dan’l Webster Inn,” says Kathleen (Kelly) Purcell ’71. “Jane spoke to us about legal financial planning in very clear terms. I felt that she had our best interests at heart and thought it was nice of her to share such valuable information with us.” Adds Beth (Quinn) Flanagan ’59, “The best part was connecting again with alumni who reminded me of how gracious, warm and compassionate Marymount Manhattan alumni are. Having them close by is great and I look forward to more gatherings with alumni.”
Recent Events and Happenings

Alumni Book Club

The newly established MMC Alumni Book Club, open to all alumni, met twice this fall. The first meeting, which brought out about 20 alumni, was on Tues., Oct. 18, 2005 at the College. Maureen (McManus) Lally ’60 and Cathleen McLoughlin ’60 facilitated a discussion on Khaled Hosseini’s The Kite Runner. The Bookseller of Kabul by Asne Seierstad was the focus of the second meeting, held on Wed., Dec. 7, 2005 at MMC.

“The MMC Book Club is a great idea,” says Maryann Bompartito ’88, who attended the first meeting on Oct. 18, 2005. “If there’s one thing I miss in these hyper-busy, multi-tasking days it is the pleasure of reading a book and having the opportunity to share the experience. Our first Club meeting was most enjoyable. The discussion was lively, and my appreciation of the book deepened as we shared our reactions and opinions. I look forward to the future readings, and I hope the MMC Book Club will continue for years to come.”

Alumni Dinner & Theatre: The Inspector General

On Thurs., Oct. 27, 2005, alumni from a range of class years gathered for dinner at Café Greco on the Upper East Side before heading to MMC’s Theresa Lang Theatre for the evening’s performance of The Inspector General.

Inspector General revolved around the age-old device of mistaken identity, in a small town in Russia where everyone is on the take. It was performed by MMC students in the Theatre Arts programs of the College and was directed by Brian Rhinehart.

“The Inspector General was riveting, and full of fun and creativity. On stage was a talented ensemble of actors that were not only good, but seemed to enjoy themselves,” says Shashi Balooja ’01, who acted in the College’s rendition of Suburbia while he was a student. Adds Barbara Hayward ’72, “I think it’s important to support the College, and this was an excellent way to do it. There’s a tremendous sense of community at Marymount Manhattan, and the alumni events provide an opportunity to be a part of it again.”

Holiday Reception

Kathleen Ryan O’Grady ’77 graciously opened her Manhattan home for an alumni reception on Thurs., Dec. 8, 2005, and attendees enjoyed an intimate cocktail reception in celebration of the holiday season.

“The warm, welcoming atmosphere of Kathleen’s home was the perfect backdrop for the gathering of alumni from various graduating classes spanning the decades,” says Clare Leavy Savage, Ph.D. ’75. “We were honored to have the opportunity to speak with Dr. Judson Shaver about the wonderful environment at the College and share with him that our daughter, Stephanie, would be a freshman this fall. This festive assembly allowed us to learn more about upcoming MMC events, future goals and to share the joy of this blessed season with part of the MMC community.”

Sr. Eileen Storey, SC, died on Dec. 7, 2005. Sr. Eileen served for several years as the MMC Campus Minister and taught classes for the MMC Center for Living and Learning.

Stay Connected!

There are two ways that you can stay better connected with MMC and all your old friends from college:

The first is to send us (alumni@mmm.edu) your email address so that we may keep you informed of events, alumni benefits, and what’s new on campus.

The second is to visit our online alumni directory (www.alumniconnections.com/mmm) and register. Membership is free and exclusive to alumni only. Best of all, you can search for friends and make new connections.

Remember, staying connected ensures that you continue to reap the benefits of being an MMC graduate for years to come!

For more information or help registering, contact the Alumni Office at (212) 517-0467.
